WindChill's Law Update: September, 2010

Nick Milroy, WI Assembly Representative for northwestern Wisconsin, plans to re-write and re-introduce WindChill's Law to the Wisconsin Legislature in the 2011-2012 session. He intends this to be the first bill he introduces in the new session. However, work on WindChill's Law must wait until after the November election. Nick is the Democratic candidate with one Republican opponent. Respected and well-liked both here and in Madison, he is campaigning hard to again represent this heavily Democratic area. Without opposition, work on the bill could have been begun this fall. It will now begin after the November 2 election, with the Legislative inauguration scheduled for January 3 and the 2011-2012 Session beginning in mid-January. Passage of a bill minimally takes several months, realistically longer due to discussion, amendments, scheduling, etc. The current bill will go back to the drafters before being re-introduced. Nick will meet with representatives of opposing groups after the new draft is written for their input before introduction. Another Assembly representative planned to introduce a similar animal abuse bill because of a very sad abuse case in his area: he has agreed to work with Nick on WindChill's Law instead. The process will be the same, including public hearings in each house in Madison early next year.

An important task will be to get support from residents in other areas of Wisconsin. The question that Senators and Assembly Representatives consistently ask of their aides is what kinds of calls they are getting on the bill from their constituents. This will be approached in several ways, and help will be needed from Legacy members: more to come on that when work begins after the election. Nick came to the WindChill Legacy's 2010 BBQ in August, and many of the Legacy members had the opportunity to meet and talk with him. WindChill's Law ran out of time in the 2009-2010 Session: the early start gives it the time needed to pass this time! ~
